CENTER MARKET

The Great Market Center of the District.

At no time in its history has Center Market stood so close to the people of the National Capital as it does to-day. On its site, from the time of the laying out of the city by President Washington, over a hundred years ago, there has always been a public market. For now more than thirty years Center Market has more than realized the liberal ideas of those who originally planned its splendid structures—with their wide aisles, their perfect ventilation, and many conveniences—all of which have aided in making it the best equipped and most liberally patronized market in the world.

Situated close to the geographical center of the District—every street car system of the city moving along at least two sides of Center Market Square, with but one fare—any person can reach it from any point in the District.

Its ever increasing patronage proves its popularity. Every possible modern convenience for the benefit of dealer as well as patron has here, at a great expense, been abundantly supplied. Over a quarter million dollars has been expended in furnishing ample up-to-date facilities for refrigeration, by which "cold" and "freezing" storage are supplied to all dealers, and they are enabled to store for long and short periods their perishable food supplies under the most modern sanitary conditions.

The enormous daily sales of the dealers in Center Market secure to those who buy there a larger choice of the freshest and best supplies of Meats, Game, Fish, Vegetables, Fruits, &c., in their season, as well as all other classes of food supplies, than is anywhere else obtainable. To this amplitude of choice is to be added the ability of the dealers, because of their large sales, to quote the very lowest rates.
